TO APPEAR AT THE DIXIE ON SATURDAY

Mary's ankle in the comedy of that name must be good to look upon. The story demands it, consequently great care has been exercised in selecting the young woman who impersonates the part. Joyce Fair will appear as Mary during the one night engagement at the Dixie Theatre on Saturday night and it is claimed that the unanimous verdict will be that nature has been most kind to Joyce—or Mary as you will—and that she possesses an ankle that is indeed good to look upon. But nature did not stop when a charming ankle had been made. Nature kept up the good work so that the complete job has resulted in an ensemble that is very pleasant to the eye. The author has provided that Mary must be very charming and very attractive and Joyce is both, consequently the complications that evolve as the tale is unfolded are the more convincing. Given three dashing and handsome young chaps, and Joyce—what more might an author want as an inspiration to write a comedy of complications, and "Mary's Ankle" is said to be just full of them, and every one a scream. But there is a very appealing love interest as well and which promises to be endangered by the several complications, but a happy ending is consistently furnished by the author and everybody is happy, especially Mary, who gets the certain one of the three dashing handsome young chaps and whom she just wants more than she ever wanted before. Judging from the cordial reception accorded this merry and dainty little play it may justly lay claim to being one of the real comedy hits of the season.
